EVANGELINE.

I strolled along the street alone
While the sighing autumn breeze
Was murmuring where a lamplight shone
Through the almost leafless trees.
There a woman yestere'en
Read aloud Evangeline.

In the hush of twilight still,
As I heard the mournful tale,
Calmly o'er the distant hill
Rose the moon so cold and pale.
Heaven, I whispered, where's my queen?
Where's my lost Evangeline?

As I listened by the gate,
With the silent stars above,
Hung my heart, my hope, my fate,
On the story of that love.
I shall win her yet, I ween,
If he find Evangeline!

Long he sought her, years and years,
O'er lonely hills and barren plains.
Daily did his falling tears
Mingle with the southern rains.
Miles and miles yet lay between
Gabriel and Evangeline.

When at last the touch of time
Turned each raven lock to gray,
Powerless now life's hill to climb,
Dying with the dead he lay,
Came one word his moans between—
Her sweet name, Evangeline!

Phantom footsteps, and anon
O'er his lone, neglected cot
Knelt a woman, pale and wan—
Her sweet face was not forgot.
"Thank God," he whispers, "I have seen,
Though in death, Evangeline!"

When the sad, sweet tale was told
And I turned to walk away,
While the last red ray of gold
Marked the slowly dying day,
Death, said I, were sweet, I ween,
That takes me to Evangeline!

Days and weeks and months have sped,
Lingering on life's dreamy shore.
Can she think this love is dead?
Must, ah, must, we meet no more
Till death's cold hand shall lift the screen
That hides my lost Evangeline!

Now here am I. Ah, God is good!
Here is where the lamplight shone.
Standing where so oft I've stood
In the twilight, not alone,
But with her, my bosom's queen,
My long lost Evangeline!

—Cy Warman in New York Sun.

UP TRELUGGAN HILL.

"Gee, whoa! Come here, Lion! Come up, Pleasant!" and the youth at the mill gathers the reins tightly in his hands, clicks with his tongue at the roof of his mouth, and the heavy red and yellow wagon rumbles out of the millyard, away from the sight of the mill windows, out of the sound of the mill wheels, down Treslawn hill toward the town.

The youth at the mill has a round sunburned face, capped by unmanageable and ruddy curls and besprinkled by uncountable and tawny freckels, but the openness of his smile engulfs the freckles, and the dust of his trade dims the curls.

Down the hill the wagon jolts between the thick and dusty hedges, where the last sprays of honeysuckle smell honey sweet through the grit, and the spikes of goldenrod and the stray straws hanging on the brambles tell that summer is dead and harvest has passed by that way. The notes of a lugubrious "Methody" hymn, cheerfully whistled by the youth, are jerked out of him as the wagon rumbles on. Down the hill it goes, then over the bridge at the foot, where the town children wander out to throw stones and fish with bean sticks and unwittingly lave off their grime. And then the glossy brutes slacken pace, and setting their shoulders to the work before them proceed to curve their way up the mile of Treluggan hill to the town.

Just ahead of the wagon toils a small figure in a black gown and a broad straw hat, her gait balanced as she goes by a big blue bundle on the left arm and a big green umbrella in the right hand.

The youth from the mill, finding his cheerful notes no longer jerked from him, misses the assistance and ceases his tune. Then, being familiar with the nature of Treluggan hill and a humane youth to boot, he resigns himself to the wagon rail and the inevitable and lets his eyes rest absently on the only figure in sight—the figure of the girl toiling up the hill before him. After a few moments another idea seems to creep into his brain.

"Hi! little maid," he calls, "would 'ee like a lift up the hill?"

The figure turns, and the youth from the mill sees that she is not quite the child he guessed her to be, in spite of her short gown. But he also sees that she is hot and dusty and not at all discomposed by the familiarity of his address, and he repeats in a more deferential manner and without the "little maid:"

"Would 'ee like a lift up the hill?"

"You'm very good," replies the girl wearily, coming toward him and holding up her bundle. "Will 'ee hold this while I get up?"

The youth takes the bundle, and setting it down in the wagon holds out his hand to help her. But she does not see it and scrambles up unaided and stands beside him, leaning against the rail. Then he sees that her skin is very fair, all pink and white as apple blossom; that her hair is black and curly, and that her features are well favored. But he also sees that her gray eyes are surrounded by reddened lids, and he guesses that she has been crying.

"You'd best get over the rail," he says, when he has noted her appearance. "'Tis steadier footin, an you can sit on that there sack if you like."

"I'll stand, thank you," she returns as she obeys the first part of his remarks and clambers over. "I mus'n' flour my frock."

"There's my coat in the corner. You can put that over the sack. 'Tisn't floury on the inside."

She takes his advice in silence, and spreading his coat seats herself, and for some moments the silence is only broken by the slow rumble of the wheels and the thudding hoofs of Lion and Pleasant.

At last the youth breaks it with a "click" of his tongue, and then his own sound seems to embolden him.

"You'm goin to Penslyder market, I s'pose?" he ventures.

"I'm goin to Penslyder, but I ain't goin to market. I suppose I shan't never go into market no more. I'm on my way to service."

"Service," he exclaims cheerfully, looking at her furtively the while. "An I make no doubt you'm pleased at the thought of livin in town?"

"No," she answers wearily, "I never wanted to see town more'n on market days. I was always for home."

"Then why do 'ee go? You'm young to be in town service yet."

"I'm near 17," she replies, and then he sees that tears are in her eyes, and she is fumbling at the pocket of her gown in search of her handkerchief.

"I'm afraid you'm in trouble," he says gently, all the cheerfulness fading out of his face in genuine regret, but as he says it all her lassitude seems struck away from her.

"Trouble!" she cries, clinching her small, toil worn hands, "'tis all trouble, never nothin but trouble, ever since I was old enough to know what it was, there its bin hangin over us, an now father's dead—an I don't care who knows that we'm miserable an beggars, an nothin else."

The youth looks at her burning face and loses the remnants of his bashfulness as he does it. "You can't be angry just with trouble, if 'tisn't nobody's fault," he remarks gravely and decidedly.

"But 'tis some one's fault—a brute who calls himself a man, who's hounded an drove my father to his death, an now he's dead there's no money at home to keep us from starvin, an I'm the oldest, an I'm goin in service."

The youth's face turns a deeper color than sunburn as he listens. When the girl stops, he asks, "And where's your home?"

"At Liscaddick, the other side of the big bridge."

"What's the name of the man?"

"Vellum—Josias Vellum. He lives in the next village, an he an father had a quarrel when they was boys together. I've heard tell that 'twas about mother. Anyhow Josias Vellum never forgave father, an he's never let a week pass without tryin to do him a bad turn, an we've got poorer an poorer ever since I can remember, an father got to look whishter an whishter an fearful that he'd never last on till good times came again, for he grew feeble an white with trouble, an then three months ago our donkey was poisoned, an I know Josias Vellum must 'a' done it, an poor father had to go an work as day laborer, an he hadn' been at that more'n two months before Josias Vellum told lies to his master an got him turned off, an then— Well, I don't care who knows it—'twasn't father's fault—he went light headed with trouble, an we only thought he was wonderful cheerful, and when we was into the market, tryin to get some pence by selling flowers from mother's bit of garden, he went—he went an hung himself."

The girl leans her head on the wagon rail and bursts into tears. The youth's face is troubled, too, and he leans forward and lays his big brown hand on hers, while Lion and Pleasant contentedly curve up the hill at their pleasure.

"Your name's Goldsworthy," he says quietly. "I've heard all about your trouble, and Josias Vellum has behaved bad by you, you'm right there; but all the same I b'lieve you'm happier than he is."

"Yes, I'm Ann Goldsworthy"—she lifts her head quickly from the rail in her astonishment, the tears still wet on her cheeks—"but how'd you know about Josias Vellum?"

There is a pause, while the youth looks fixedly at the white stretch of hill before him. "Because I'm Josias Vellum's son," he answers at last.

The girl's eyes blaze with anger. "Then I'll please to get out an walk rather than be beholden to Josias Vellum's son for a lift."

But again he lays his big hand on hers, though she roughly shakes it off. "Don't you go till I tell you one thing more. I'm Josias Vellum's only son, but when I found out what he'd done to your father from some words he let slip when he heard of the hangin I told him what I thought about it, and then I walked straight away and took service at Treslawn Mill. An if you've got your troubles he's got his now, for I'm the only livin bein he's got in the world, and he'd 'a' done anything for me, and he knelt and prayed to me, with the tears runnin down his cheeks, but I left him and called him a murderer."

There is a long silence, during which Ann Goldsworthy thinks a good deal, and then:

"I b'leeve I'd rather be me than you," she declares. And after another pause, "But you don't care very much for your father, I s'pose?"

"Why not?"

"Why, you couldn' 'a' borne it. It must have bin awful to see him cryin to you."

"Yes, it was," he returned shortly. And he gathers the reins tighter and flicks at Pleasant's ear with his whip, and Ann Goldsworthy watches him furtively in her turn till he looks down at her and meets her eyes. Then he leans down toward her again, and the gravity fades out of his face as he says coaxingly:

"You don't want to get down and walk, do you?"

Ann Goldsworthy blushes and smiles a little smile in spite of her swollen lids and hot cheeks. "No," she answers shyly.

Then, while her eyes are cast down, Tom Vellum looks at her again and seems to like the doing of it.

"And now you must please to tell me where you'm goin to service."

"'Tis at the 'Methody' preacher's as 'general.' I don't s'pose I shall like it very much at first after always livin home, an the wages isn' what one could call high. But I don't know much about service yet. I ain't up to servant's ways, so I've got to be taught."

"I s'pose you get your Sunday out?"

"Yes."

Treluggan hill is a good mile, but even miles come to an end if steady perseverance in one direction is adhered to, and in spite of their unchecked indifference in the matter Lion and Pleasant do not fail to reach the top at last. But by the time the last trees are casting their shadows across the dusty road, and the first roofs are rising above the bend, Tom Vellum has said much to comfort Ann Goldsworthy, and Ann Goldsworthy has forgiven him for being Tom Vellum.

"I'd best get down here," she says while they are still among the green shadows, and he helps her down the wheel and hands her bundle to her.

Then, as she looks at him and stretches up her hand to say "Good-by," he takes it and holds it for a moment or two.

Then reddening furiously, "Shall us keep company?" he murmurs, and he leans over the side of the wagon in a most perilous attitude were not Lion and Pleasant entirely dependable.

Meeting lips sound but as the rustle of leaves on the air, but lives are changed thereby.

"Gee, whoa! Soh, Lion! Come up, Pleasant!"

The wagon rumbles on to the town, and the little figure in black trudges forward with her portable property. But it is the top of Treluggan hill now, and things look different somehow, for the youth from the mill and the little maid in black are smiling as they go.—Lilian Quiller Couch in Speaker.

He Was Modest In His Charge.

In the good old times in a certain country town a gentleman of the decayed respectability sort, whose debts were more numerous than was desirable either to him or his creditors, made a friendly call at a lawyer's office and found that he had gone to dinner. He sat down, however, and presently a stranger entered, and supposing him to be the lawyer said: "I wish to make an inquiry about Colonel Ball. Our bank has come into possession of paper bearing his name, and we are a little anxious about it. Can you give me an opinion regarding his soundness?"

Now, the man addressed was Colonel Ball, and he was shrewd enough to keep within the strict truth. Rising from his chair, he brought one hand down firmly and said: "I would, sir, that I had every piece of paper bearing Colonel Ball's name in my possession at this moment. I would feel perfectly secure if I had it." "That is all I want to know," declared the visitor. "We will extend his time if he wishes it, and I thank you for your statement. What do I owe you?" Colonel Ball was modest in his charge for this opinion.—Boston Home Journal.

The Oyster Pearl and Its Shell.

I have seen in books of instruction both in this country and in England the statement that "the formation of the pearl in the oyster shell is caused by a disease of the oyster." And this statement is more or less generally believed, as is also the erroneous inference to be drawn from it, that the oyster referred to is the edible oyster. The mother-of-pearl is nothing more than a series of layers of nacreous matter deposited by the oyster upon the interior of the shell, and the pearl itself is a perfectly accidental formation. It is caused by a similar deposit of nacre around some foreign object. This foreign substance may be a grain of sand, a parasite or some similar object, but most authorities agree that it is more usually an undeveloped egg of the oyster around which this natural deposit is thrown.—Harper's Young People.

Why Slang Is Used.

Slang is an effort on the part of the users of language to say something more vividly, strongly, concisely, than the language as existing permits it to be said. It is the source from which the decaying energies of speech are constantly refreshed.

It is the function of slang to be a feeder of the vocabulary. Words get threadbare and dried up. They come to be like evaporated fruit, juiceless and tasteless. It is the function of slang to provide substitutes for the good words and true which are worn out by hard service.—Detroit Free Press.

It was ordered that $6,283.60 be transferred from the swamp and overflowed land fund to the general fund; also that $2,000 be transferred from the general fund to the indigent fund.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I SOON GAINED TWENTY POUNDS. ALL THIS OCCURRED AFTER I HAD LEARNED AND WELL KNOWN PHYSICIANS HAD FAILED. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

Local hunters report duck shooting in the marshes bordering Sonoma creek to be very poor. The birds have not yet commenced to "fly" in any considerable number and in consequence small bags only have been made. Quail are also scarce, and on ground where a few years ago a good wing shot could secure five or six dozen birds a half-dozen cannot be bagged this season. Evidently the game law is having an opposite effect from that intended by our law-makers. When there was no game law quail and other kinds of wild game were plentiful in this valley. To-day, after being protected for many years, game of all kinds, if we except ducks and geese and other migratory birds, is becoming a thing of the past.

CHARGED WITH SEDUCTION.

A Young Man Arrested and Admitted to Bail.

Robert Magetti, a young Swiss, about 25 years of age, and for a number of years a resident of this place, but who removed to San Rafael a few months ago, was arrested last Saturday by Deputy Sheriff Sparks, on complaint of P. Baccala, a laboring man of this city, on a charge of seducing his daughter, aged about 17 years. Magetti was taken before Judge Cheney and immediately released on giving a bond in the sum of $300 pending a preliminary trial. Magetti is well-known in this valley. While residing here he was foreman of Eden Dale ranch. He was also a member of the Sonoma Valley Band and several secret societies, and has rich and influential relatives in Marin county.

As we go to press the preliminary examination of Magetti is being conducted before Judge Cheney. The defense is being conducted by J. P. Rodgers of Petaluma and J. R. Leppo, Assistant District Attorney, is representing the prosecution. The examination is being conducted with closed doors, the only persons admitted in the court-room being the defendant's attorney, the interpreters, the prosecuting attorney, the young lady and young gentleman in the case and a squalling infant which is named after the alleged seducer.

The Grand Jury.

The Grand Jury was impanneled as follows in Department 1 of the Superior Court last Tuesday morning: W. P. Ink, Thos. A. Forsyth, Robert Hall, Abraham C. Shelton, Wm. A. Mills, Thomas H. Cheney, S. Q. Barlow, A. E. Leggett, Bryant Forsyth, John C. Purvine, J. M. Bowels, Armstrong Faught, Lewellyn J. Hall, David M. Winans, Wm. E. Woolsey, George W. Gaston, Andrew J. Walk, C. D. Near. W. P. Ink was appointed foreman.

The following oath was administered to the foreman:

"You as foreman of the Grand Jury, will diligently inquire into, and true presentiment make of all public offenses against the people of this State, committed or triable within the county, of which you shall have, or can obtain legal evidence. You will keep your own counsel and that of your fellows and of the Government, and will not, except when required in the due course of judicial proceedings, disclose the testimony of any witness examined before you, nor anything which you or any other grand juror may have said, nor the manner in which you or any other grand juror may have voted on any matter before you. You will present no person through malice, hatred or ill will, or leave any unpresented through fear, favor or affection, or for any reward, or the promise or hope thereof; but in all your presentments you will present the whole truth and nothing but the truth, according to the best of your skill and understanding, so help you God." Then to the other jurors: "The same oath which your foreman has now taken before you on his part, you and each of you shall well and truly observe on yonr part, so help you God."

THE BARN BURNER.

The Jury Fail to Agree on a Verdict.

The case of the People vs. Chas. Taylor, who deliberately set fire to L. M. Johannsen's barn near this place several months ago, has been on trial several days this week in the Superior Court at Santa Rosa. Taylor was first tried by a jury as to his sanity and pronounced sane. Then he was put on trial for arson before another jury and the members were discharged Thursday afternoon, being unable to agree.

The jury were out seven hours. The testimony in the case was calculated to surround a verdict with some difficulty, says the Democrat. Though the question of the defendant's sanity was passed on in the affimative, there was still enough in the conduct of the man to suggest a question as to his being wholly responsible for his acts. The case was continued until next Monday to be reset for trial.

Went to Jail.

Simon Layrs, the young Frenchman convicted of trespass in Judge Cheney's Court last Monday morning, was sentenced the same afternoon to pay a fine of $50 or go to jail for 50 days. This was the lowest penalty that the law allows for conviction of trespass. Layrs being without means or well-to-do friends was unable to pay the fine and was taken to Santa Rosa by Deputy Sheriff Sparks and lodged in the County Jail to serve out his sentence.

J. F. McDonald of San Francisco spent last Sunday at the home of Mrs. Linehan and family.

Dyspepsia in all its forms is not only relieved but cured by Simmons Liver Regulator.

THAT TRESPASS CASE.

Simon Layrs Convicted on a Retrial.

The second trial of Simon Layrs, an employee of the Nicolini Bros., for trespass, took place before Judge Cheney and a jury last Monday morning.

The following well-known citizens were sworn in as jurors to try the case: H. Appleton, J. E. Kearney, Otto Rufus, Jas. Burns. Douglas Church, Wm. Ellis, O. Gericke, H. Rubke, Robt. Atwood and Wm. Sherman.

Assemblyman J. C. Sims of Santa Rosa represented the prosecution and Wm. B. Read acted for the defense. The testimony was substantially the same on both sides as was introduced on the first trial, which resulted in a hung jury—six being for conviction and six for acquittal.

To the surprise of many the jury on the first ballot brought in a verdict of guilty of misdemeanor.

It is seldom that a Sonoma jury agrees on a verdict, but when a verdict has been reached it is remarkable, but nevertheless it is a fact, the convicted party has generally been looked upon as a man of fair reputation. and the case the outcome of spite and vindictiveness. It is only when a case is left for the Judge to pass his judgment upon without the aid of a jury that justice has been meted out to offenders in this town. Trial by jury in Sonoma is a farce. For years petty local offenders have gone unwhipped of justice owing to the inability of jurors failing to agree on a verdict. For the most part justice is only meted out where the offender comes into court and pleads guilty or the case is left for Judge Cheney to decide.

California Fruit in the East.

Wm Ruffner, brother of Jas. Ruffner of this city, who has just returned to California after an extended trip through sixteen States and one territory in the West and Northwest, writes as follows about California fruit:

"The fruit crops are almost an entire failure in all of the States, in fact I saw no fruit until I passed St. Jo., Missouri, coming west, and a scarcity of dried fruit can be readily anticipated, together with a sharp advance in prices of the California crop, as this State will be drawn on for the deficiency.

I was much surprised to find California fruit in all the cities of any importance wherever I went. It did not matter whether it was in Missouri, Illinois or Kentucky, the California fruit was there just the same. It appears that Chicago is the great distributing point for California fruit in the whole West and Northwest. There is a very wide difference in the prices which the consumer pays and the producer in California gets; in fact it is too great, and the market will never be what it should be until the consumer gets more for his money and the producer realizes more for his fruit. Think of three pears for a dime in the East to the consumer and tons of them going to waste and being fed to hogs in California, and the difference in the prices of other kinds of fruit being still greater. The problem of a better price to the producer and a cheaper one to the consumer is one which the California fruit-grower cannot solve too soon for the interest of all. The reason the people give in the Western States this year for not having any fruit is, because there was a late frost and killed it all. But we could hardly believe that they would ever have any fruit that would be worth anything if we are to judge by the way they neglect their orchards. We are quite sure that none could be produced in California by such a neglect of cultivation, as good a fruit State as it has a reputation of being, because the trees would all die."

The People vs. Ben Nicolini.

Yesterday the case of the People vs. Ben. Nicolini, who was also arrested on complaint of H. Thies, on the same charge sworn to against Simon Larys, was on trial before Judge Cheney and a jury composed of the following citizens: W. H. Hyde, V. Jansen, T. S. Glaister, R. E. Perkins, L. Litzius, J. S. Young, Richard Watt, M. T. Morton, S. M. Walker, Jas. Sparling, W. J. Minkle and J. P. Weems.

The evidence in this case was precisely the same as was sworn to in the two trials of Simon Layrs, a synopsis of which was given in these columns last week.

Attorney J. P. Rodgers managed the defense, and Assistant District Attorney Leppo represented the prosecution.

The jury, after being out for some time failed to agree upon a verdict and were discharged. They stood seven to five.

The case, it is understood, will now be dismissed.

DR. PRICE'S Cream Baking Powder.

The only Pure Cream of Tarter Powder.—No Ammonia; No Alum.

Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

A Matter of Health

IT costs more to make Royal Baking Powder than any other, because its ingredients are more highly refined and expensive. But the Royal is correspondingly purer and higher in leavening strength, and of greater money value to the consumer. The difference in cost of Royal over the best of the others does not equal the difference in leavening strength, nor make good the inferior work of the cheaper powders, nor remove the impurities which such powders leave in the food.

Where the finest food is required, the Royal Baking Powder only can be used.

Where the question of health is considered, no baking powder but Royal can be used with safety. All others are shown by official analyses to contain lime, ammonia or alum.

THE COW PUZZLE.

She Was Tied With a Forty Foot Rope and Tried to Cross a Fifty Foot River.

"There was once a cow," began Uncle Peter,

When Uncle Peter said that, and they knew he was beginning a story, the little boys always ra* up at once. They did so now.

"What is it, Uncle Peter?" they asked, both together.

"Why, there was once a cow," repeated Uncle Peter, "and she was tied near the bank of a river. She was tied just beside the river, in fact, for the grass was green and juicy there, and the farmer thought it was an excellent place for her to get her dinner. So he tied her to a tree by means of a long, very long, rope"——

"How long was the rope, Uncle Peter?" interrupted the little boys, both together.

"The rope was 40 feet long," replied Uncle Peter. "Plenty long enough for the cow to have lots of room to roam about and get all the dinner she wanted. She walked around and enjoyed the grass, and then she took a bath in the river, and then she lay down and took a nap under the shade of the trees. Then she got up and ate some more grass. Now, I suppose, this cow really had too good a dinner, for after awhile she became dissatisfied with the grass where she was, and she thought the grass upon the other side of the river looked much greener and more juicy than upon the side where she was."

"She was a very foolish cow, Uncle Peter!" said the little boys, both together.

"Of course she was," replied Uncle Peter. "Yet no more foolish than some little boys I know, who have so many pleasant things that they sometimes get tired even of them!"

The little boys both turned red when Uncle Peter said that. "Please go on with the story, Uncle Peter," they said.

"Well," said Uncle Peter, "this cow said to herself: "The grass is ever so much better the other side of the river. I wonder how I can get over there and have some of it? So the cow began to get across. But the river was 50 feet wide, and it took the cow a long, long time to think of a plan to get across."

Here Uncle Peter paused.

"Well?" asked the little boys, both together.

"Well," answered Uncle Peter.

"How did she get across?" asked the little boys.

"Why, that's the puzzle," replied Uncle Peter. "You must guess it. What did the cow do?"

So the little boys began to guess. They guessed she flew across; they guessed she took a boat and rowed across; they guessed she jumped over; they guessed every ridiculous thing that two such foolish little boys could guess.

But to everything they guessed Uncle Peter shook his head and laughed.

"You forget," said he, "the river was 50 feet wide, and the cow's rope was 40 feet long. How could the cow do any of those things?"

"Tell us, Uncle Peter," begged the little boys, both together. "Tell us what the cow did do!"

"Do you give it up?" asked Uncle Peter.

"Yes, yes," cried the little boys, both together, "we give it up."

And after he had thought a long, very long time, he said, "That's what the cow did."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Dangers In Droughts.

Long droughts carry in their train certain inevitable dangers to the public health. The first of these evils is the scarcity of water—itself a great source of anxiety to those whose business it is to supervise the sanitary welfare. Then comes the inadequate flushing of sewers and the risk, through water saving practices, of drains becoming befouled. The tendency for certain diseases of cholera type to increase in intensity—the heat and want of water being conditions for their diffusion—in a hot, dry season is well known. Finally we get the river courses of the land, which are used as huge sewers by the towns in their neighborhood, becoming pestiferous channels. Any one who of late days has been in the neighborhood of the Midland railway station at Leeds must have had practical proof of the pestilential state of the air. Sewer gases acting on relaxed or ordinary sore throats may produce diphtheria. The drains, sewers and rivers should be purified.—New York Telegram.

A Three Minute Address.

The address delivered by the archbishop of Canterbury to the Duke and Duchess of York at their marriage contained exactly 374 words and required just three minutes to deliver. A deal of good advice was put into those three minutes, as can be seen from these few sentences: "This is an age and this a people which, in spite of many outward changes, still in its heart of hearts looks to the highest to do the common duties of all better than all. They desire to have before their eyes and to be sure in their hearts that amid all the splendor and care of a kingdom there is above its central hearth all mutual honor, all sweetness of domestic life, the faith and worship of God, the quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price. To some it is given that not their simplest ways are indifferent."

A MAN WITH A BIG HEAD.

He Has Already Outlived Doctors Who Bought His Skull Years Ago.

This question about Ben Butler's enormous brain reminds me of an odd character who now resides in Washington—Loftus J. Parker, a man who has a natural case of "big head" that surpasses anything known in physiological or anatomical literature. Butler had 63 ounces of brain, but this man Parker surely has 100 ounces. If his skull is no thicker than that of the average man and the specific gravity of the thought matter contained therein is similar to that of the small headed varieties of the genus homo, then Mr. Parker will show a brain weight as much greater than that of Butler, Cuvier and other big brained men as theirs were greater than an every day Harrison Republican's.

Parker's head is simply enormous, measuring a fraction over 32 inches around, that of the "average man" being 11 inches smaller. Mr. Parker is a man of about 50 years of age. Twenty or 25 years ago three Washington physicians noticed the monstrous size of his brain pan and resolved to own it after Mr. Parker had no further use for it. They called him in one day and made known their desires. At that time he was a business man of the capital, not exactly as successful as the Stewarts, Drexels and Girards—still he was making a fair living.

These medicos proposed to him that he retire on a bonus or subsidy which they would pay regularly if he would sign an agreement to the effect that they were to be the sole owners of his gigantic skull and contents after he had "shuffled off this mortal coil." An agreement was soon arrived at, and Parker retired on the "endowment" which was then and there set aside for his maintenance.

I understand that he has already outlived two of the physicians that made the proposal, and that the third is likely to lose all interest in the skulls before Parker relinquishes his right to what is known as "the biggest head in the world."—St. Louis Republic.

Salaries of Some Teachers.

By the way, the big new universities founded by Stanford and Rockefeller have done good work in the way of increasing the salaries of fine teachers. Dr. Jordan, who was Dr. Coulter's predecessor at Bloomington, gets a salary at the California college of $10,000 a year, besides a house and other extras, which are said to increase his total compensation to $15,000 a year. President Harper receives $10,000 a year, I have understood. Compared with the average stipend of a college professor, this seems munificent indeed.

Dr. Broadus, president of the big Baptist Theological seminary, is a scholar of international reputation, and yet his pay is paltry when his genius and learning are taken into consideration. I was told by a well informed Baptist a few years ago that the doctor got only $3,000 a year and his house rent. He may get more money now. Men who sit in college chairs are above mere monetary considerations. Still it is gratifying to know that a few receive the rewards to which their talents and culture entitle them.—Exchange.

A Puzzled Waiter.

Some years ago a gentleman living in Charleston had as an attendant a colored man who was an excellent servant in all respects save one—he could not be taught to serve things invariably at the left hand of guests at the table.

At length the gentleman hit upon an ingenious expedient. Coats were then worn single breasted in Charleston, and he told Cæsar that he must always hand the plates and other dishes to the guests on the buttonhole side.

This plan worked to a charm for some time, but one day there came a foreign guest who wore a double breasted coat. Poor Cæsar in dismay looked first at one side of it and then at the other, and finally casting a look of despair at his master he exclaimed, "Buttons on bofe sides, massa!" and handed the plate right over the gentleman's head.—Youth's Companion.

"German Syrup"

For Throat and Lungs

Hemorrhage Five Years.

"I have been ill for about five years, have had the best medical advice, and I took the first dose in some doubt. This resulted in a few hours easy sleep. There was no further hemorrhage till next day, when I had a slight attack which stopped almost immediately. By the third day all trace of blood had disappeared and I had recovered much strength. The fourth day I sat up in bed and ate my dinner, the first solid food for two months. Since that time I have gradually gotten better and am now able to move about the house. My death was daily expected and my recovery has been a great surprise to my friends and the doctor. There can be no doubt about the effect of German Syrup, as I had an attack just previous to its use. The only relief was after the first dose." J. R. LOUGHHEAD, Adelaide, Australia.

My wife was troubled with nervousness about one year before she took Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, and at that time had very severe attacks of spasm, convulsion, and pains in different parts of the body; when in this state her lower jaws would act violently and set sometimes, bite her tongue, breathe heavily, then short, then seemed to stop entirely, get a wild look in her eyes and rolling around, then stop sometimes; it would take two men to hold her in bed otherwise her body would cramp and be so for two hours. She took but two bottles of the Nerve Tonic, which cured her entirely of all these torments, which myself and wife gladly testify it truly had the desired effect D. S. M'GILLIS.

We have received hundreds of testimonials from pleased patrons during the past five years: "I had beautiful flowers from the seeds you sent me two years ago, and from experience I know the seeds are exactly as advertised."—Mrs. N. C. Bayne, Dixon, Wis. "Myself and friends have sent for various things advertised by you, and have found them to be entirely satisfactory."—Miss Davis, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher (a regular subscriber), and Grace Greenwood, need no introduction. We have ordered our seeds last season. Do not confound this offer with the catchpenny schemes of unscrupulous persons. Write to-day. Don't put it off! Six subscriptions and six Seed Collections sent for 60 cents.
